

SET STAGE FOR TRIAL OF DWYER, KING OF RUM ROW

Famed Ring Dealt in Millions of Dollars and Operated Small Liquor Navy

BY JAMES HASWELL
New York.—In William V. Dwyer, who goes on trial here July 6, federal authorities say they have "the man higher up"—organizer and directing genius of "the biggest rum-running ring in the history of prohibition." The charge is conspiracy to violate the Volstead Act.

With him will be tried 16 others, culled from the 60 indicted last January on evidence gathered during months of the most difficult sleuthing. District Attorney Emory Buckner of New York in person will direct the prosecution.

The ring, according to authorities, dealt in millions—at least $25,000,000—operated 24 ocean-going vessels and financed others, employed hundreds of men by bribes and otherwise, imported liquor from Canada, and France to Rum Row, smuggled it from Rum Row into the United States—in one case using a coast guard cutter for the purpose, and delivered it to the ultimate consumer by bottle, case or truck load.

The alleged ring was organized like an army. It had an intelligence unit to spy on government officers, an air force, entertainment corps, smuggling corps, delivery system, and numerous bribe givers. It operated a shipyard, and three piers and had a special secret telegraphic code.

So complete was the ring's grip on New York, Buckner says, that at one time it collected $2 a case on all liquor smuggled in by rival operators.

Of the ring actually lived up to the description of the prosecutors, and if Dwyer was its master mind as is charged, then he is a demigod by all the standards of a modern underworld.

Popular legend pictures a gypsy, crimsontinted outlaw, who boasted of buccaneering and ruled with the lavish hand. The man himself when arrested a few weeks before last Christmas declared the tales were "pure romance."

He appeared in court as a suave man about town, sparkling with diamonds, wearing a swastika luck charm, strong in his innocence. He had a wife and five children. He owned a half interest in two race tracks, at Montreal and Cincinnati.

Dwyer's bond was set at $40,000. Total bail for 30 of the men arrested was $268,000, all furnished promptly. The stories told about the rum ring are as plentiful as bootleggers.

One of the indictments is on the unusual charge of sending men to sea in an unsafe vessel. It was the William J. Malone, which sank with all hands.

The authorities first heard of it when an anonymous phone call asked them to help. The rum syndicate, it is charged, sent no relief and did nothing for the men's surviving families.

Another story concerns a coast guardsman whose wages were $33 a month. The man appeared at an expensive night club in a shabby overcoat. "Here, take this," the guardsman found a $100 bill in his hand, "if there's anything left after you get a new coat, buy something for your mother."

A truckload of Scotch whisky was seized. A telephone call, and truck and contents mysteriously disappeared.

Landings at a certain Manhattan pier was "easy as taking a quiet stroll in a crowded harbor at

EQUITY ASSOCIATION WILL MEET WEDNESDAY

The quarterly meeting of the Outagamie Equity association will be held next Wednesday at Greenville. noonday, suddenly spended fire from a hidden battery when two coast patrol-boats appeared. When captured later she proved to be lined with steel. Heavy weather cut off Rum Row from the mainland. Certain liquor stocks ran low. One moonless night a coast guard cutter slipped up East river and the stocks were replenished. Preparation of the case has been going on since last July, when the steamer Augusta was searched at Yonkers, N. Y., and 4,000 "packages" of liquor found in a coal bunker. One crew led to another. General Lincoln C. Andrews detailed 50 men under Col. Walton A. Green. Buckner employed John M. Harlan to take charge of the legal end, and gave him Herman T. Stiehm and William E. Stevenson as assistants. Now they are ready to go, and prohibition's greatest trial impends.

PAINTER PICKS THIS CITY FOR OUTDOOR SCENES

Noted Scientist and Archaeologist Visits Relatives Near Appleton

Robert Fletcher Gilder, Sc. D., noted scientist, archaeologist, landscape painter and newspaperman of Omaha, Neb., is visiting at the home of Walter H. Steffensen, Calumet-rd., while working on landscape paintings of Wisconsin. Mr. Gilder, whose record appears in "Who's Who in America," is employed by the Wisconsin club of Omaha to paint landscapes of the Badger state's beauty spots. He has painted scenes around the Dells of the Wisconsin river and Devils Lake and will paint several more in the vicinity of Mellon. The club, composed of University of Wisconsin alumni residing in Omaha, will choose one of his paintings for representation to the city as a gift.

Mr. Fletcher is a brother-in-law of Mrs. Steffensen. While in this state recently he painted a landscape for a Nebraska real estate man who is a went out 45 miles, the personnel of the ship not knowing in which direction. Signals were picked up by the plane and it was given the course back to the ship, corrections of the course being sent at intervals. Following these the pilot brought the plane directly over the Richmond.

Silver Buck, doughty cowboy and prize of the Jones stables. Astride his favorite mount, Buck hurtles through space; spans yawning chasms; makes maddening dashes and perilous climbs. Those tingling feats of horsemanship demonstrates the hazards risked by Buck and Silver Buck before the camera.

While these thrilling deeds play important parts in the unfolding of the virile drama there are numerous highlights that will cause audiences to gaze with wonder. To witness Buck in the tense moments of this picture is to know the height of action drama. Ellnor Fair heads the supporting cast, playing the leading role opposite Buck. Dave Dyer, Will Walling, Sam Allen and Robert Mack have prominent roles.

LOWELL SHERMAN AS A PARISIAN SATAN

"Satan in Sables," the Warner Bros. Classic of the Screen showing at the Elite Theatre today and Friday, with Lowell Sherman star ring, gives him one of his best roles in that of Michael Lyev Yervedoff, a Russian prince. He plays a gentlemanly profligate, a dissolute but lovable spendthrift, cursed with boundless power and limitless wealth whose soul is ultimately tempered and regenerated in the white heat of pure love, colossal sorrow and thwarted revenge. It is the type of characterization in which Sherman stands out above all others on the screen and on the Broadway stage, where he has been one of the reigning favorites for years. MODERN FAMILY CLASH PORTRAYED IN "PADLOCKED"

Realistically picturing the clash between the old and the new generation, "Padlocked," Alan Dwan's latest Paramount production coming to Fischers Appleton theater next Sunday, Monday and Tuesday will captivate our audience with the vitality and dramatic vigor of its story, the charm and human appeal of its characters, and the glamor and luxury of its atmosphere and backgrounds. Readers of the Cosmopolitan Magazine will recall the story by Rex Beach which appeared serially some months ago. It is a story of what is happening today in thousands of homes where parents and children look at life from different points of view. Edith Gilbert is a shining example of the modern, freedom-loving American girl, who resents her narrow-minded father's efforts to "padlock" her soul, stifle her ambitions and repress her innocent pleasures. When his intolerance finally leads to her mother's accidental death, the girl runs away from home to become a cabaret dancer in New York. Her exciting adventures amidst the gay night life of Broadway and the millionaire society atmosphere of Long Island is vividly and brilliantly portrayed. The manner in which the elder Gilbert is brought to a startling realization of his injustice to his daughter, their subsequent reunion and the girl's romance with a young scion of wealth bring the picture to a stirring climax and a happy ending.

Lois Moran, who jumped into the limelight via "Stella Dallas," gives a memorable performance as the modern daughter. Noah Berry handles the exacting role of the bigoted father in his usually deft fashion; and Louise Dresser adds to her laurels with her effective delineation of a woman with a past. Also Vincent Carr and his gang in a stage presentation, "Cabaret Capers."

BUCK JONES' NEW WESTERN PICTURE TORNADO OF ACTION
Speed and action—these two ingredients are foremost in "The Timber Wolf," a thrilling William Fox story of the lumber camps, starring the peerless Buck Jones, who appears

Van Dyke have outdone themselves in conceiving and executing many new, daring thrills. In "The Timber Wolf," Buck proves the mettle of his equine, and

SENIOR SCHOOL JAMMED DESPITE NEW BUILDINGS

Principal's Report Points to Difficulties of Administration

Erection of the junior high schools has failed to relieve the overcrowded condition at the Senior high school, according to the annual report of H. H. Helble, principal, at the annual school board meeting. The enrollment during the past school year, was 749 with an average daily attendance of 662.

An increasingly large number of students have enrolled in the commercial, manual and home arts, music, physical education, social and dramatic activities according to the report, and this fact coupled with the increased importance which the modern school library holds in the school of today, accounts for the present inadequate facilities of the high school for these purposes.

USE OTHER BUILDINGS
For some time in the past, it has been necessary to conduct all of the musical instruction and activities, athletic contests, dramatic productions, commencement exercises and large school functions in places other than the high school. The problems in administration with such a situation should not be considered lightly, Mr. Helble said.

Next year there will be an additional enrollment of about 100 students and the problem will be still more difficult. The high school has adopted a program of standard testing, the purpose of which is to diagnose the weak spots in the teaching and to compare the scores made by the local pupils with national standard medians. In each instance, the teachers have followed up the tests with remedial teaching, when the necessity was revealed. Standard test have already been given in senior English, senior and sophomore, Latin, German and French and in all cases the scores made by the pupils of the school here have been above the national average. It is planned to extend this testing to other departments next year, according to Mr. Helble.

The program for the coming year includes the continuation of the standard testing, intensive study of curriculum, supervision of instruction and educational-vocational guidance. Besides these matters the teachers will give more attention to supervised or directed study of pupils, home room advisor system, and instruction in character and conduct, Mr. Helble reported.

NEIGHBORS' WIVES

BEGIN HERE TODAY
JOHN and FAY MILBURN buy a home when their baby girl is born and the advertising agency in which John is partner and copy writer lands a new contract. Among their acquaintances are—
NOEL and VERA BOYD, whose marriage is strictly "modern."
PAT and MARIAN FORBES, who have three children and whose domestic life is unhappy because of Pat's roving tendencies.
John was fascinated on meeting NELL ORME, who, Forbes hints, is having trouble with her husband.
Fay took JUDITH, the baby, to visit her parents in Chicago, and during her absence John "ran around" a good deal. When Fay returned gossip had related his actions and sharp quarrels followed, one of which drove John out "on a tear," and Fay threatened to leave him if he again went out with other women.

John finds that people are talking about him and NATHANIEL GRAHAM, his partner, charges his actions are damaging the firm's reputation. John later, by accident, meets Nell Orme at Vera Boyd's. He resolves not to see her again, realizing she is carrying him off his feet, but he does, and one day comes when he takes her madly in his arms.
Fay learns of it and goes through with her threat to leave him. John closes the house and takes an apartment. MISS KNISELY, his firm's secretary, resigns and John later learns she has gone with a rival agency. Nat Graham comes back on vacation and again quarrels with John about the firm's damaged reputation.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY
(The names and situations in this story are fictitious.)
CHAPTER LI
Nat Graham was not long in hiring a young woman to take the place of the useful Miss Kniseley. But after a week John Milburn found she'd never do—at least she'd never approach the standard set by her predecessor.
It seemed to John that Graham had been decidedly careless about hiring her. He had spent very little time interviewing applicants; had virtually taken the first one that came along.
To John it seemed to be a sign that Graham either was intensely disgusted with the way things were going or he simply had reached the point where he didn't care. Ordinarily John was thinking as he glanced up from his desk to regard the new worker with disapproving eyes. Graham was the hardest employer to please he had ever seen—a regular old maid. But now—Things simply couldn't go on this way much longer, he told himself. Either he and Nat would have to reach some sort of understanding—which would mean, of course, that Nat would have to drop his critical attitude—or a break was a foregone certainty.

And such was the state of his mind—with this dreadful thing that had happened to him and the talk that was circulating about him and the chaotic state of affairs at the office—that it would have taken very little more aggravation from Nat Graham to precipitate a quarrel that could have but one ending—he to go one way and Nat another.
Never once, during the year that had witnessed this gradually widening breach, had he ever questioned Graham's ability, his willingness to work or his integrity.
It was only the man's personality—cold, forbidding, eternally revolving around the passionless business of chasing the dollar. It had often occurred to him that he would have welcomed some sign in Nat of not being all that he should be—some human weakness, some little fault. But hang it, the man never bled. He never touched a woman, he refused to look at a woman, he rarely—in his moments of greatest annoyance—said anything stronger than "damn."

The very fact that he was possessed, apparently, of no vices whatever, that his armor of smug virtue seemingly was puncture-proof, served only to anger John all the more. Consequently he was more than surprised—he was literally shocked—when he discovered some evidence that after all Nat might not be playing exactly square with him.
An errand one day carried him, alone about lunch time, to a part of the downtown section that he rarely ever visited. Back again on the street, he realized that he was hungry and that the busy afternoon ahead of him would not allow him sufficient time to go to his usual eating place.
So he slipped into the first likely looking restaurant that he encountered—a place that he hadn't seen the inside of in years. And he was amazed when, after he had ordered and had let his eyes rove about the place, to see Nat Graham eating with a man he finally, after puzzled staring, recognized as Kelly, of Kelly and Jones.

At first the thing seemed of little significance; perhaps Nat had accidentally encountered the man and they had decided to eat together. But on reflection John decided that the thing was really very odd.
After all, Graham, who had been the first to tell him that Kelly and Jones were establishing a rival agency in Appleton, had spoken of them as people they would have to watch and be on their guard against. And then this business of Miss Kniseley's decamping and going over to Kelly and Jones. In view of that it looked decidedly queer for Nat to be lunching with the senior partner. Fortunately he was sitting in such a position that he could watch the two men and at the same time be unobserved by them. And Graham seemed to be in deadly earnest about something.

His jaw was thrust forward, his eyes mere slits—a habit Nat had when he was discussing important business. And then he pulled from his pocket a pencil, with which he gestured as if to add emphasis. And later he seized the menu card and began to jot down presumable figures on it.
What could it mean? John asked himself the question over and over, but found no satisfactory answer—unless it meant that Nat was thinking of allying himself with Kelly and Jones. And, in that event, where would he (John) be? Without Graham, what would happen to their business?

John paid his bill and walked slowly down the street, thinking on the way that he was jumping at conclusions. He must not suspect Nat of any betrayal like that—the man's whole character was so free of reproach that it wasn't fair. Still, "Pshaw!" he exclaimed. "Nat knows that he's got too good a thing in his present position. What could Kelly and Jones offer him? Perhaps they've been after a new account—both of them—and they ran into each other and decided to have lunch."
However, the thing was not to be dismissed so lightly. Perhaps if Miss Kniseley's actions hadn't been so strange, he could have thought little of it, but it was hard to imagine Graham's being on friendly terms with a firm that would take an almost indispensable employee away from them.

And persistently the thing bobbed up to worry him. Was Nat capable of throwing him overboard?
He was hearing once a week from Fay, who considered it her duty to report on Judith. Reading one of these notes one day, he suddenly paused, laid the letter down and, out of a mental fog that had blurred his thinking ever since Fay had left him, came to the shocking realization that the thing was final. Fay had written that she had, the week before, consulted her lawyer.
Not until he read that line had he grasped the significance, the dread finality of it.
Rather had he unconsciously sought to evade a full realization of what it meant. And somehow the fact that she could find it in her to write to him had softened the blow and raised in him the hope that perhaps, after all, Fay given time enough, might reconsider.
But here she was, consulting her lawyer. . . . Divorce. . . .
How, he thought in an agony of spirit, could she write so cold-bloodedly of her intention?
Did this dreadful thing really have to happen to him?

Was there no way of bringing about a reconciliation?
He realized now, with a sudden nip at his heart, that he loved Fay more dearly than anything in the world—that life without her would be a flat, tasteless thing, an unsatisfying hunger.
Divorce.
People, after all, did quit when they discovered they had made a bad bargain.
There was Clara Wayne. She had obtained a divorce and no one had tried to dissuade her—everyone had pitied her. And were people allying themselves on the side of Fay, as they had done in the case of Clara? Undoubtedly they were, he thought.
He had a hard time keeping his letters to Fay from being pathetic. He would take his medicine like a man, he thought. He would not whine or whimper. He told her nothing about his new business troubles, or his dreadful loneliness.
It seemed so strange to be writing letters to a woman who had been his wife and who was proceeding to cut the legal strings that tied them together. It seemed so strange that Fay could cut him adrift and still not consider him an enemy.
Still, he thought, that perhaps was the way such things were done. Clifton Lane had even called on Clara while their divorce was in the courts.
Everything he did now was without flavor. Vera Boyd had called him up several times since his last meeting with Nell Orme, but he kept evading her—he could find no interest in her in other women, not with this insatiable longing for Fay and Judith filling him. The thought that kept recurring to him time after time was that he was being punished pretty badly, and he cursed himself for having missed his big chance.

Under the circumstances, it was but natural that he should take to drinking a little heavier than usual—or so, at least, he told himself.
Pat Forbes was pleasant enough—company during these monotonous evenings—Pat not having reformed to the extent where he had entirely forsaken his liking for the bowl—but even the humorous, quizzical Pat failed to rally his sinking spirits as much as he expected.
There was something subdued about the usually sparkling Forbes these days, something of the whipped dog about him. It must have been true, John thought, this thing Dick Menefee had told him about Pat's employers having served notice on him.
John found himself saying that these days, something of the more miserable. Now, if he could only find Paul Davidson. . . . But this new and tragic-sounding thing about Paul had suddenly cut him off. There was much to ponder about in regard to Paul. How could it be possible, John thought, for the cynical, liberty-loving Davidson to allow himself to be trapped into a marriage with some cheap strumpet? Now there was a tragedy, he told himself, almost as enormous as his own. As a matter of fact, he thought, it was even worse. And he found himself wanting to get hold of Davidson, to tell him how sorry he was, but he went no farther with it.

Life, he reflected, was a pretty incongruous thing. There was the brilliant Davidson, suddenly weighted down with a dreadful millstone; the man above all others who could not be snared into marriage.
And there was Nell Orme, with some tragic secret between her and Howard ruining her life.
And there was Noel Boyd—a contemptible pup if ever there was one—braver in his philandering, prouder of his infidelity, and yet unpunished. And himself—the victim of idle whispers, malicious gossip—convicted on the flimsiest of evidence.
More and more was he irritated by the actions of Nat Graham, who seemed to have a lot of secretive business these days.
Still, John thought, "I might be thinking things of him just because of that talk he had with Kelly," and he held fast to his little secret.
But one afternoon, after Graham had been particularly unpleasant, John was unable to resist a mysterious allusion to the effect that "some of your own actions are a little hard to explain, you know," and in the face of Nat's astonished stare turned abruptly away and left his partner not a little worried.

EXERCISE CAUTION IN ELECTRIFYING ROADS
Chicago—(AP)—While granting that electric power was more satisfactory and cheaper than steam on the electrified sections of the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul railroad, H. E. Byram, its former president and now one of the receivers of the road, has advised the joint council committee conducting hearings on the electrification of the 36 railroads entering Chicago, particularly terminal electrification, to "proceed cautiously."
He refused to commit himself for his railroad, although he said he has been convinced personally that terminal electrification is feasible and would be embraced by the railroad, if they were convinced of a paying return on the huge investment involved.
Byram denied Tuesday that the present financial condition of the railroad was due to the electrification of 418 miles of main line in Montana and Idaho and 210 miles in Washington. Its experience with electric power "has been very successful," he stated, but to electrify its terminal trackage in Chicago would cost about $20,000,000.

Here's the Cigarette Because "It's Toasted"
LUCKY STRIKES are made from the world's finest Turkish and domestic tobaccos, perfectly blended.
Besides this supreme quality of leaf tobacco as compared with all other Cigarettes—"IT'S TOASTED".
Just what does this mean—this phrase, "IT'S TOASTED"?
The tobacco is oven toasted at very high heats for 45 minutes; then chilled with the moisture completely restored. The toasting brings out the hidden flavors of the superbly fine tobacco. The chilling seals in these flavors; seals in, too, the moisture that has been restored. It all acts like a cold plunge on the pores of the body.
That's why LUCKIES taste so good. Why LUCKIES are always fresh when they come to you. Why millions prefer this uniquely fine cigarette.

BECAUSE IT'S TOASTED
